Predictors of finance management in dementia: managing bills and taxes matters

Clarissa M. Giebel^(a1) ^(a2), Emma Flanagan^(a3) and Caroline Sutcliffe^(a4) ⁺

<https://doi.org/10.1017/S1041610218000820> Published online: 13 August 2018

Abstract

Objectives:

Finance management skills deteriorate early on in dementia, and can influence the ability to maintain control over personal affairs. The aim of this study was to assess the contributions of different types of cognition and motor functioning to finance management.

Design:

Cross-sectional analysis using secondary data.

Setting:

Community living.

Participants:

Baseline data from the Uniform Data Set from the National Alzheimer's Coordinating Centers were obtained and extracted up until December 2016.

Measurements:

Measures on everyday functioning (Functional Assessment Questionnaire) and cognition (memory, executive functioning, and language), the Clinical Dementia Rating scale, and questions on Parkinsonian motor symptoms (gait and balance) were analyzed using bivariate correlation and linear regression.

Alzheimer's disease (AD) = 8,201; behavioral variant frontotemporal dementia (bvFTD) = 386). Cognition and motor functioning varied significantly with poorer finance management skills in DLB, executive functioning, and language, and for 11.4% of the variation in managing bills, and for 11.4% of the variation in managing taxes.

It is important for people with dementia, to avoid potential financial exploitation. Findings from this study highlight avenues to pursue to delay deterioration in managing bills and taxes, and help maintain financial control.

The Neuropsychiatric Inventory Questionnaire (NPI-Q) (Kaufer et al., 2000) measured the presence and severity of 12 neuropsychiatric behaviors: delusions, hallucinations, agitation, depression, anxiety, elation, disinhibition, apathy, irritability, aberrant motor behavior, sleep, and appetite change. Symptom severity is rated from "1" (mild) to "3" (severe).

Several neuropsychological tests were employed measuring global cognition with the Mini-Mental State Examination (MMSE; Folstein et al., 1975), working memory with digit forward and digit backward counts, executive functioning with the Trail Making Test A and B and the Wechsler Adult Intelligence Scale (WAIS; Wechsler et al., 1997), including verbal fluency (animals and vegetables), as well as language with the Boston Naming Test (Kaplan et al., 1983).

The Clinical Dementia Rating (CDR) scale (Morris, 1993) was employed to measure the severity of the dementia. The CDR global score indicated the severity level, ranging from 0 (no dementia), 0.5 (questionable), 1 (mild), 2 (moderate), to 3 (severe).

Motor functioning was assessed by systematically collected data on the presence or absence of Parkinsonian motor symptoms of changes in gait disturbance, falls, tremors, and slowness.
